

RETHINKING PUBLIC SAFETY:

Violence, Governance, and the Limits of Policy

Debates about crime and violence increasingly shape public policy in the United States and around the world, but “public safety” is far from a settled concept. Is safety best achieved through policing and punishment, or through public health, prevention, and democratic governance? And when violence – especially gun and political violence – escalates, do existing policies and tools still work?

Cierra Oliveira
MSPPM-DA student,
Class of 2027 Heinz
College Fellow

Aaron Lauth
Chief of Police,
Carnegie Mellon University

Daniel Nagin
Lester Hamburg
University Professor of Public Policy & Statistics,
CMU Heinz College

Richard Garland
Assistant Professor,
Pitt School of Public Health
and Executive Director,
Reimagine Reentry

Thursday, February 19
12:30-1:50 p.m.

Room A-301, Hamburg Hall
Carnegie Mellon University

register
now!

This event is part of the ongoing “Discourse, Dialogue, and Policy” series, a collaborative project between Carnegie Mellon University Heinz College’s School of Public Policy & Management and the University of Pittsburgh’s School of Public & International Affairs.

University of Pittsburgh®

School of Public and International Affairs

Carnegie Mellon University
Heinz College

INFORMATION SYSTEMS • PUBLIC POLICY • MANAGEMENT